The Trick Played on "Dot" by Byrne—
Three Grizzlies Who Used a
Hunter's Traps.

Head Keeper Byrne, of the Zoo, is a man who in his day plays many parts. It devolves upon him to christen the new-born kangaroo, mix the grizzly's drink, fan away bad dreams from the camelopard's eyelids, administer consolation to the dying orang outang, manufacture powders and pellets for the dyspeptic alligator, apply the massage system to the gouty bea constrictor, and serve in every capacity from cook to doctor of divinity, says the Philadelphia Record. None among his multifarious duties is more onerous than the care of his pet's teeth. A dentist's occupation is under the best circumstances, gruesome enough, but when the cavernous jaws which form the field of dental operations are the property of leopards, elephants and anacondas, the work is of a particularly delicate nature.

When Keeper Byrne made his first attempt to heal King Leo's pain by robbing him of a tooth it was by applying a great pair of tongs through the bars of the animal's cage. With a dainty bit of horse gizzard pressed between the tongs by way of bait, the Zoo's dentist forced his way into the animal's mouth and sought to clutch the aching ivory. But Leo perceived the ruse, seized the tongs between his gnashing teeth and bit them in two as if they had been willow wands.

Laughing gas was the next expedient of the ingenious Byrne, and the lion was soon asleep. Notwithstanding his deep slumber, however, the dentist hesitated about inserting his forceps in the lion's jaws, lest the animal should be awakened by the pain and his fingers suffer the fate of the tongs. A stout piece of twine was accordingly fastened around the tooth, and from a safe distance the aching molar was quickly drawn.

Among the beasts of greater growth toothache is comparatively rare, but in the monkey colony it frequently occurs. Neither man nor beast can continue a diet of candy, peanuts, shoe buttons and diamond rings year in and year out without having to suffer for it. Of all the mischievous monkey family "Dot" is the most proverbial sweet-tooth, and she spends a great part of her time in bandaged and poulticed misery. Not long ago one of her eye-teeth suffered excruciating agonies, and made her life a burden.

The big-hearted Byrne was stirred to pity, and he endeavored to get near enough to extract the tooth. But dot demurred, and the moment a finger was into her mouth she would give a vicious nip and skip away up the side of the cage. But the brass-buttoned dentist contrived to loop a bit of patent thread about the iniquitous tooth. To the other end of the thread was fastened a brick bat. With a sharp nip Dot darted away, then felt the tug of the brick and halted. She was too old a bird to be caught at that trick. But Byrne was provided with the proper ammunition. A big red fire-cracker was exploded close to Dot's tail and in the twinkling of an eye the frightened little monkey had fled to a far-off corner of the cage, and the wicked little tooth was gone forever.

The denizens of the Zoo pit that now-days sport gently with the festive peasant and pass their days in peaceful innocence were not always thus. The doughty huntsman who infested their lair when they were yet in their native wildness in the heart of the Rockies tells a tale about the pranks that used to make their hearts light and their lives happy. He relates that he one day surprised the Zoo's trio in a deep mountain fastness, and they were so much engrossed that his approaching footsteps were all unheeded. The trio had evidently put to flight an unwary sportsman, who, in his terror, had left his ammunition "tackled" behind him. An open cigar box, half filled with choice Havanas, lay on the ground. One of them had found its way into the mouth of bear number 1, who was engaged in the task of combing out his whiskers before the monkey hunter's mirror. No. 2 had donned the cap and hunting jacket which had been dropped in the fight, and, with the now harmless gun to his shoulder, had struck a military attitude, while No. 3 was grinning from ear to ear and softly humming the national hymn as he poured a rich brown liquid from the would-be slayer's discarded flask. On the approach of the Zoo's agent their revels were speedily at an end, and these three bears have ever since been pronounced prohibitionists.

The use of calomel for derangements of the liver has ruined many a fine constitution. Those who, for similar troubles, have tried Ayer's Pills testify to their efficiency in thoroughly remedying the malady, without injury to the system.

A Woman's Discovery.
"Another wonderful discovery has been made, and that, too, by a lady in this county. Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she withstood its severest tests, but her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly and could not sleep. She bought of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and was so much relieved on taking the first dose that she slept all night and with one bottle has been miraculously cured. Her name is Mrs. Luther Lutz." Thus writes W. C. Harnick & Co. of Shelby, N. C. Get a free trial bottle at R. S. Hale & Co.'s drug store.

The Verdict Unanimous.
W. D. Suit, druggist, Bips, Ind., testifies: "I can recommend electric bitters as the very best remedy. Every bottle sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles, and was cured of rheumatism of ten years' standing." Abraham

Hare, druggist, Bellville, Ohio, affirms: "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my twenty years' experience, is electric bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony, so that the verdict is unanimous that electric bitters do cure all diseases of the liver, kidneys or blood; only a half dollar a bottle at R. S. Hale & Co.'s drugstore.

For chapped hands, roughness of the skin, pimples or blotches of any kind on the face or other parts of the body, apply Dard's Specific. It works like magic and is warranted by druggists. Sold by R. S. Hale & Co., wholesale and retail druggists, Helena.

Merit Wins.

We desire to say to our citizens, that for years we have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Dr. King's New Life Pills, Bucklen's Arnica Salve and Electric Bitters, and have never handled remedies that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refund the purchase price if satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits. R. S. Hale & Co., druggists.
